Many

do not realize that the name of Gay Head is used literally, and that the bold head-land standing out into the sea is, like Joseph's coat, "of many colors." From the broad white beach one climbs over 200 feet of sand and clay-hardened almost into stone—that is almost bewildering from its strange jagged shapes, and its brilliancy of coloring. In this clay have been found sharks' teeth, bones of whales, and a variety of fossils.

Here is a light-house which has been called one of the most curious in its construction in the country, and it certainly is one of the finest.

Here, too, are the Indian reservations, but now the barren, lonely hills only tell of a race that is gone.
